The peaceful use of the atom comes to Southern California

Our San Onofre nuclear generating station is now feeding electricity into Edison lines. Because you're getting power from this new source, we'd like to explain how electricity is made from atomic energy.

Inside the 140-foot diameter steel dome that is the most prominent feature of the San Onofre plant is an atomic reactor. The steel reactor vessel, enclosed in a concrete chamber, contains millions of tiny pellets of nuclear fuel. These pellets produce energy in the form of heat. These uranium pellets are only "slightly enriched." That means that less than four percent of the material is active. In this slightly enriched form, the uranium reacts as a steady, entirely controllable heat source. And that's all it can ever do, because of the kind of uranium it is.

The heat from the reactor is used to turn water to steam. The steam then spins turbines that generate electricity.

The advantages of nuclear stations are that they are clean and quiet and produce electricity economically.

Nuclear generation of electricity is an answer to the ever increasing power needs of growing areas. It's one more way we have to provide you with a constant, plentiful supply of electricity. That's what our customers want, and as an investor-owned utility, it's our business to make sure they get it.

We invite you to visit our San Onofre Nuclear Information Center. It's located on the West side of Highway 101, five miles South of San Clemente, overlooking our nuclear power station. Open daily, 9 am to 5 pm.
